HOLIDAY MYTH BUSTERS

by Jenna Mears

Among the secret that Santa Claus isn't real, the holidays are full of myths. Here are some of the top myths debunked!

- 1. Weight gain is inevitable. Americans believe they gain up to five pounds throughout the holiday season from all the sweet treats and meals. In reality, the average person only gains one pound. The real problem is Americans don't lose the weight after the holidays.
- 2. Poinsettias are toxic. Some people believe this festive plant contains toxic petals. Although the sap might cause a rash to people with latex allergies, the average child would have to eat 500 poinsettia leaves to reach a dangerous dose.

- 3. We lose heat through our head. We all have heard our parents harp on us to wear a hat during the winter. We believe that we have to keep our heads warm because most of our body heat is lost through them. But scientists have discovered that your head only loses about 7% of your body heat.

CREATE HEALTHY HOLIDAY BOUNDARIES

by Kaitlin Enneking

It's no secret the holidays can be a stressful time of year. Bringing your family together often brings joy and excitement along with unresolved or hurt feelings. Stir that together with the anxiety you may get trying to throw the perfect dinner party and fitting the must-have gift in your budget, and the holidays can start to feel like a mine field of emotions.

Navigating the holiday season without stress becomes much easier when you identify and implement boundaries for yourself, your family, and your friends. Creating healthy boundaries doesn't have to be complicated or confrontational. Simply follow these tips and you'll find yourself on your way to a less-stressed holiday.

Make your plans early

Some years it's impossible to visit with everyone, and deciding which side of the family you visit or which friends to see can cause conflict between you and your significant other and your respective families. Instead of waiting until last minute to decide where you'll be spending the holiday, begin planning early. Explain to your family why you will or will not be seeing them and keep track of your decision. Next year, make sure you give your time and presence to those you missed this year. No one likes being separated from their loved ones during this time of year, but if they understand how you've made your decision and see that you are splitting your time fairly from year-to-year, it's less likely to hurt feelings or cause arguments.

The holidays are filled with invitations. Get comfortable with saying maybe.

Don't over commit

Practice saying, "That sounds nice, but I will have to think about it and get back you." The holidays are filled with invitations to parties, gift exchanges, and charitable events. You may want to participate in all of them, but chances are once you've committed to too many, you will experience more stress than enjoyment. Get comfortable with saying maybe. Let friends and family know you think their offer sounds enticing, but you will need time to decide if you are able to join in the fun. You know yourself best. Decide how many gift exchanges your budget can handle and how many parties you prefer to attend. When you've hit your limit say, "No thanks."

The holidays are about community and togetherness. Putting a couple simple boundaries in place will ensure you are able to enjoy them and spread that joy to others. $mathbb{\pi}$

PRACTICING GRATITUDE

by Jenna Mears

The holiday season is full of joy, giving, and cheer. Oftentimes, the season is also full of stress, traveling, and a jam-packed schedule; it is very hard to stop and think what we are grateful for and appreciate in our lives. Here are some tips for how to practice gratitude:

- 1. Keep a gratitude journal and write down what you are grateful for each day. This will force you to appreciate something in your life every single day.
- 2. If you identify something or someone with a negative trait, switch that in your mind to a positive one. This will allow you to have a more positive and grateful outlook on life.
- Give someone at least one compliment a day. This will not only make you feel good, but it will make others feel good and appreciate you, too.
- 4. When you find you're in a bad situation, ask yourself: "What can I learn?" It will make the bad situation a learning experience that you will be grateful for later.

FINANCIAL CORNER WITH PETE THE PLANNER

What would your financial life look like if you practiced gratitude daily? Would you struggle to budget or have debt? If we practiced gratitude daily and it became our mindset, our behavior would naturally follow. Grateful people don't take more than they need, they don't spend more than they make, but they do give to those in need. During the holiday season, it's easy to get caught up in the whirlwind of spending that has become the main focus of the season. This year I challenge you to give to those in need. It is perfectly acceptable to spend money on those you love, but this year be open to sharing your love and money with those who have very little. Better yet, gather up your loved ones and volunteer together. Practice gratitude this season, and I think you'll find the benefits last much longer than anything money can buy. mu

5. Become involved in a cause that is important to you. You can donate time, money, or a talent you have. By joining, you will have greater appreciation for the organization and feel good about yourself for the contribution. ¤

HARVEST OF THE MONTH: MUSHROOMS

by Mechelle Meadows

Mushrooms often get a bad rap in the food world. Don't let the fact that they are a fungi fool you into thinking they are unsafe to eat or have no taste to add to your favorite pizzas, soups, pastas, or meat dishes. They contain high levels of antioxidants and other nutrients such as vitamin D, folate, and potassium. Mushrooms are a superfood just like more glamorous fruits and vegetables; studies have linked them to improved blood sugar and insulin levels, and also play a role in DNA repair, which can prevent growth of certain cancer cells.

How to select

Regardless of the type of mushroom, select ones that are smooth to the touch, firm, and clean. If they appear slimy or very brown, they have already started to go bad. It is normal for mushrooms to have an earthy smell.

How to store

While many people store mushrooms in the original container that they were purchased in, they will actually last longer if you put them into a separate plastic bag wrapped in a paper towel or a brown paper bag. Dry conditions are key since moisture makes mushrooms turn bad very quickly.

How to prepare

Since mushrooms are very porous, the best way to clean them is by gently rubbing them with a damp paper towel. If they are going into a soup or salad, it's ok to rinse them in water. Mushrooms can then be sautéed, grilled, roasted, or even eaten plain as part of a vegetable tray. $\mbox{\ensuremath{\square}}$

RECIPE OF THE MONTH:

Chicken with Mushroom Sauce

Ingredients

- 4 (6-ounce) boneless, skinless chicken breast halves
- 2 teaspoons canola oil
- ½ cup chopped shallots
- ½ teaspoon salt, divided
- 1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
- 1 (8-ounce) package pre-sliced mushrooms
- 2 minced garlic cloves
- ½ cup dry white wine
- 1 ½ teaspoons all-purpose flour
- 3/4 cup fat-free, lower-sodium chicken broth
- 2 Tablespoons butter
- 1 teaspoon minced fresh thyme

Makes 4 servings (½ chicken breast and ½ cup sauce)

Nutritional Info

PER SERVING: 290 calories, 10.5g fat, 5.5g carbohydrates, 42g protein, 526mg sodium, .8g fiber

Directions

- 1. Place each chicken breast half between 2 sheets of heavy-duty plastic wrap and pound to ½-inch thickness.
- 2. Heat a large nonstick skillet over medium-high heat. Add canola oil to pan; swirl to coat. Sprinkle chicken with ¼ teaspoon salt and pepper. Add chicken to pan; cook 3 minutes on each side, or until done. Transfer chicken to a serving platter; keep warm.
- 3. Add shallots and mushrooms to pan; sauté for 4 minutes or until browned, stirring occasionally. Add garlic; sauté for 1 minute, stirring constantly. Stir in wine, scraping pan to loosen browned bits; bring to a boil. Cook until liquid almost evaporates. Sprinkle mushroom mixture with remaining salt and flour; cook 30 seconds, stirring frequently. Add broth to pan; bring to a boil. Cook 2 minutes or until slightly thick. Remove pan from heat; add butter and thyme, stirring until butter melts. Serve with chicken immediately.
